A. Read the following passage and answer the following questions: 5 marks

A long time ago, in Akbar's kingdom a man named Birbal was famous for his sense of humour and wit. Once, a highly learned man came to Akbar's court and challenged Birbal to answer a question. He wanted to test Birbal and find out whether he was as clever as the legends about him. Birbal accepted the man's challenge.

The learned man asked Birbal, "Tell me, would you like to answer one hundred simple questions or a single difficult one?" Akbar and Birbal had a long, tough day and they were in a hurry to wind up their court, so Birbal said, "O learned one! Go ahead and ask me just one difficult question."

"Who came first-the chicken or the egg?" came the question. Birbal replied to the question without giving a second thought. "The chicken," he said. The learned man stood there, confused at such a swift answer. "How do you know?" he said. "We agreed to just one question," replied Birbal, "and you have already asked me that. I do not need to answer any more questions." The learned man was left speechless by Birbal's witty reply.
